Old Press Yard.

At Newgate they tell of the old "Press Yard," where prisoners were tortured to confess their guilt by having their hands and feet secured in a wooden frame, and then, in the pleasant words of a prison rule, "so much man and stone as they could bear—no more." An incident of this torture was unsuccessful with the wretch thus "pressed" to reveal his misdeeds. They told him of him, the person who had been "pressed" in galvanizing the body of a man who was hanged, when the prisoner's right arm flew out and struck the face of the officer of the jail with such terrific force that he was killed by the blow.

The disease, particularly a revolting one known as "prison fever," was rampant in Newgate. Not only did the prisoners die in the fetid cells, but if they survived they brought the germs into the courtroom with them. In this year two judges, the Lord Mayor and a whole lot of jurymen and witnesses caught various diseases at the Old Bailey and died from them. It was this revolting "prison fever" that caused the rampant shrubbery being placed in front of the prisoners' dock. When Mrs. Marsh was in the dock, she threw the shrubby branches out and flung them at the

Many a writer of fame has left some of his treasures in Dickens's works, in those of Thackeray, Alcott and in the "Uncle Toby Papers." The author of "David Copperfield," for literary purposes and by accident, was at Newgate in "Dickens's Empire," he had the scene of the trial in his "Tale of Two Cities" and the story of the escape was changed at Newgate, Wemmick and Pip, the victim of "Great Expectations" were described in "Sketches by Boz." CHINESE SCHOOLBOYS ARE REWARDED FOR POLITENESS.

The model school boy is to be looked for in China. Eleven hundred college boys, all called "Qing-tai," or "Fons-Kong," and who are noted for their politeness, have been caught either of them indulging in a rude remark, or even letting off his superfluous words by a run or a leap, is a sight to be witnessed every day in that Eastern city.

A correspondent stood in one of the streets of Peking, and watched the schoolboys as they passed. They did not hurry, but walked steadily, carrying by their books under their arms. When they came to a youthful feeling of a brotherly smile, which was given him by a boy here and there as he listened

REMARKS SPECIAL.

New York, June 28.—The sky was overcast and the rain was coming down in torrents when the French liner, La Savie, docked at her pier, but there was sunshine about the ship's stomach; in fact, had been raining for an hour across, for among the passengers was an Englishman who, to escape the wrath of angry parrots in Paris and some of the formalities of the French marriage law, had decided to come to America.

They were Augustin Schlusman, a son of the famous Doctor Heinrich Schlusman, who, in 1870, first excavated and explored the site of ancient Troy, and Nadine de Bornemann, whose father is said to be a well-known merchant in Paris. He is 34 years old, she is 26. They were married last year, they were, on account of their youth and inexperience, the objects of much admiring and sympathetic attention from the other passengers. Nobody suspected that there was anything unconventional about the trio of M. and Mme. Schlusman for that is the way they were down on the station platform where they arrived at Quarantine, when trouble arose for the happy couple.

When as the girl's mother had discovered the flight of the couple to Havre and had ascertained there that they had taken refuge in England, she telegraphed to the law firm of Couder Bros. in this city and the conversation of blimpompanis. The Chinese behavior would have been controlled by these people, but the Chinese are quite contrary to all ideas of school-book form. The more sedate a Chinese is in his behavior the more he conducts himself as a man of the world. The more sterner he is considered by his school-bows, and the more praise he receives in his schoolmasters and his parents, the more he lets his little bits of hair out of their dress. They wore no hats, and brushed all their hair straight back into their cone-shaped buns; while a fringe of stiff bristles dividing the hair from the unshaven territory of their heads.

Old Friends.

Make new friends, but keep the old, those are silver, those are gold. The new-made friends, like new wine, will mellow and refine. Old friendships that have stood the test, are like old wine, the longer they stand grow may wrinkle, hair turn gray, friendship never owns decay. If you and old friends kind and true come once more, your youth returns. New friends must, their youth is gone, when cherish friendship in your breast, is good, but old is best, to make new friends, but keep the old, those are silver, those are gold.

French Consul, who in turn notified Commissioner Williams on Ellis Island, and the latter in turn notified the French Consular Boarding Officers O'Connor and Flanagan, who went out for the couple.

Bourgeois Love, with a Franchise.

Maude Leon, who is connected with the Courier firm, went down in the quarantine cage and married Saviole at a Renaissance ball.

Boarding Officer O'Connor had been on the alert, however, and at the time that Mr. Leon had climbed over the side of the ship, the surprised pair was penned up in the second cabin. O'Connor ordered them to remain until the ship was docked.

La Saviole was safely tied up at the altar and the ceremony was turned over to Commissioner Williams that he was sorry so much had been made of the ceremony, for his only object was to see the civil marriage formality was observed. After the ceremony Mr. Leon made this statement:

"On account of the intricacies of the French laws concerning marriage, and the fact that one of the contracting parties is under age, the young people thought that they would come to this country and get married."

"As Mr. Schlemmian is an American citizen, the ceremony is perfectly legal and binding," said Schlemmian, "and as an American citizen, and when his son was here two years ago he decided to declare himself an American."
